There is a space for another (hopefully DLC who knows) It would create a ton more build variety, with so many talismans i cant see why they couldn't add another in. I mean as it is i generally only NEED 3 and the 4th is just a "might as well use this since i have an open slot" or it's a "lemme swap into this for this specific reason" a 5th would just make it even more

meh. Since, I'm usually using multiple talismans to increase my damage, and then maybe one to meet gear requirements, I wouldn't mind having a slot for a defensive talisman (although I can still add more damage with another slot). More limitations makes more variety. More available slots means you have to make less choices and homogenizes everything. Less choices = forces you to sacrifice one talisman over another = more variety. I don't get your argument in that sense. If you want more talisman slots, just say that. You say less is more but I'm betting most people are running jar and erdtree favor and radagon's soreseal so the vast majority of people only have 1 slot that variety is going towards. More limitations does not necessarily make more variety, theres more to it than that. All that matters is that limitations stop us from taking every single thing that is good and a 5th slot wouldn't come close to that, so the extra slot would likely provide increased variety instead of less. I never cared about justice, and I don't recall ever calling myself a hero. I have always only fought for the people I believe in. ~Zero. Imagine if we had 6! No 7. no imagine if they removed talisman slots and made it so that any talisman you have / found is permanently active! Imagine going to level 600 and calling it a build. Imagine if we had 6!
